

At left—Laying out the flower bed. Character building can be provided for the girls through just such homely things as caring for a bed of flowers. The regular attention, which it must receive to be a success, is needed in children's lives. At right—And bunnies! The faithful care even of rabbits teaches regularity and continuous effort. If aptitude is shown, the chap may soon add a few dollars to the family income.

Coming poultry experts! Let them begin when they are young to enter contests such as these. A bright-eyed lassie and a sturdy lad will soon know more about the practical side of the chicken business after working at it awhile around home than most adults. Just try it and see for yourself.

Above—Holiday time! If the poultry business has been properly worked there will be dollars rolling in for a little extra training in this kind of salesmanship.

At right—String beans for dinner, raised in her own garden—and they are big ones too. Healthful appetites and sun-tanned faces will not be the only thing gained either. Besides the beans there will be the actual realization that steady work produces tangible and pleasurable results.

Edith May can practice her lesson in knitting out-of-doors. Play will be the sweeter for her if she knits or purls for a while first. She will be glad she has persevered when the task is finished—the work done.
